Prohibition: Its Economic and Industrial Effects

ACCIDENTS, DUE TO DRUNKENNESS, SHOW DECLINE DURING PROHIBITION

Nation-Wide Survey Fails to Find One Industrial Executive Who Will Say That Shop Mishaps Have Increased Since Dry Law Was Adopted

By PROFESSOR HERMAN FELDMAN Of the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance, Dartm

Article VI. Has Prohibition Reduced Industrial Accidents? That liquor has been an important cause of accidents, and that elimination of liquor would materially reduce accidents, has for decades been one of the accepted dogmas of industry. As recently as 1914, round table discussion of the drink question at the congress of the National Safety Council led some enthusiasts to post near the conference a large sign: "NEW SLOGAN — NOT SAFETY FIRST, BUT SOBER FIRST." Then, after several of those present had related various experiences of accidents connected with drink, the gathering passed a resolution for the elimination of the use of intoxicants in the industries of the nation, which began with the statement: "Whereas it is a recognized fact that the drinking of alcoholic stimulants is productive of a heavy percentage of accidents and of disease fecting the safety and efficiency of the working men."

That drink was a cause of accidents has had some support in studies of a technical nature, chiefly those written abroad. H. M. Vernon, an English authority, studied the number of mishaps in a factory at various hourly periods, and found that these injuries "dwindled as the average consumption of alcohol dwindled," and that the better record of women on this score was "in accordance with their relatively greater sobriety." Accidents were also supposed to be closely connected with after pay day effects.

Have the assertions of those who said prohibition would reduce industrial accidents been proved by the experience since prohibiti Counting in war-time prohibition, beginning on July 1, 1919, we have now had about eight years under national liquor restrictions, a period ample to answer the question if the information is available, Difficult Question to Answer At a congress of the National Safety Council in 1921, Dr. Lucian W. Chancy, of the United States Department of Labor, probably the fore-most authority on accident statistics in the country, stated: "On this question of intemperance, I spent twelve years in the attempt to find records which would clearly demonstrate that the use of alcoholic liquors was a serious factor in accident occurrence. Now I know per-records which would clearly demonstrate that the set alreadoric records which would clearly demonstrate that the set as serious factor in accident occurrence. Now I know perfectly well that it has been; I may say, that it still is; but to demonstrate that class of accidents as having been caused by the intemperate use of alcohol, was so impossible that I gave it up."

That was in 1924. At that time one could have been pardoned for not going further. But today we have had prohibition almost six years longer. Has this additional experience, or flors recent atudies, thrown any more favorable light on the possibility of getting statistics showing just what the effect of prohibition on accidents has been?

No pains were spared in the search for statistical data, and every possible lead was followed up. As illustrations of the efforts made to get concrete facts showing the relation of liquor to accidents, letters of inquiry were sent to the heads of every accident board or workmen's compensation commission in the states of the Union, to accident insurance companies and to organisations interested in safety; to authorities on accident prevention, and to hundreds of the largest and most progressive industrial concerns in the country. In addition, the writer made it careful study of the existing material published on the subject, visitud a good many plants and consulted personally with authorities in various jariedictions.

subject, visited a good many plants and consulted personally with authorities in various jarisdictions.

No Object Data on Accidents Due to Liquer Available

Of the object or semiodicial Bodies and authorites, hattoned and state, from New York and Massachusetts to California, there was not one which had any actual figures abowing the relation of liquor to accidents. Some had rather decided views and observations, but these will be stated later.

Workman's compensation commissions in large industrial states, which might have been thought to fave duch records because of the defenses put up by employers when armices employees claimed compensation for injuries, could recall only one or two cases a year, or none at all, in which liquor was an issue. Accident insurance companies, vitally interested in the causes of accidents, had not, for reversal reasons, segregated intoxication as a cause one reason being that workmen's compensation commissions were antagonistic to such defenses and held the employer liable for conditions in his plant. The training of young men for foreign trade and foreign service, and the increasing activities of foreign trade organizations throughout the United States, were strongly indorsed. The part of co-operative work of foreign trade organizations in assisting materially in stabilization of methods and elimination of trade practices detrimental to American export trade was especially stressed.

stressed Restrictive Measures

Recommendations of several coun-Recommendations of several countries regarding the readiness to invoke restrictive measures in an effort to force a more nearly even balance in the exchange of goods with other countries were characterized as embodying a faliacious premise. To enforce a balanced exchange of merchandise between two nations was pointed out as impracticable owing to the fact that the trade of the fact that the trade of the orld has become one composite hole, from which all are benefited. This was particularly stressed in a summary of American trade for the last year showing the greater part of its volume with most active competitors in all of the markets of the world and pointing to the fact that such an increase is productive of greater purchasing power in these countries, thus leading to larger exports, both crude and manufactured.

Lindbergh's Exploit Revives Interest in Floating Islands

Scheme for Establishing Stages in Ocean at Which Airplanes Might Alight and Refuel Comes Into Transatlantic Air Service Consideration

By Special Cable

PARIS, May 28—The project for floating islands in the middle of the Atlantic to enable airplanes to traverse the ocean in several stages has been revived by the magnificent exploit of Captain Lindbergh. After a week of continuous fetes, serious attention is being paid to the possibilities of an air service between Europe and America, and it is remembered that Lindbergh himself on his arrival remarked that practical steps might be taken to realize a scheme of artificial bays where airplanes can find stores of gasoline and descend at need.

This opinion of the man who has made a direct nonstop flight is important. His performance is exceptional, and possibly could not, under existing conditions, be repeated as a matter of commonplace commercial usage. But it is obvious that if an airplane can alight at reasonable distances and seek protection from the weather great progress can be accomplished almost immediately. By Special Cable

Captain Lindbergh's program for the day included a visit to the tomb of the unknown soldier, a reception for presentation of the grand gold medal of the Royal Aero Club and a banquet at the American Club.

Yesterday on his way to luncheon with Paul Painlevé, French Minister of War, Captain Lindbergh ran across the only member of the "I-Knew-Him-When" Club known to be in Paris. He is Simon Warolin, a photographer of Little Falls, Minn, who has known Captain Lindbergh since the age of three when his family bought land from the filer's father.

What else could Germany do, since it is on a friendly dooting with Soviet Russia as becomes evident from the treatles in concluded, a spokesman of the For-eign Office told The Christian Sci-ence Monitor correspondent. Little Press Comment

It is not to be expected that Dr. Friedrich Sthamer, German Ambassador in London will propagate Bolshevism in England. The Reich likewise could not prevent the Arcos officials from coming to Germany, the Monitor informant continued, since, owing to the Treaty of Berlin Soviet, Russians have permission to settle down in Germany, and the Reich has no personal complaint to make about these officials. The press so far refuses to comment or this new development, apparently endeavoring to pass over it as lightly as possible. Merely Germania de clares that it fails to understand why the Arcos officials must com to Germany to settle their affairs while the Conservative Lokal Anzel-ger believes that the Reich's consen to take over Soviet Russian interests in London is contrary to Germany's interests. Strangely, Dr. Einstein himself hows no interest in the efforts of the surface of the s turn which Communist influence lately took in China caused Russia to look West for markets and capital, and was followed—perhaps more than coincidentally—by Russia's rather late degision to attend the International Economic Conference at Geneva. As for trade, during the last Soviet fiscal year Great Britain purchased 32 per cent of Russia's exports, while Russia absorbed but one and a half per cent of British export commerce. Other nations have shown displeasure with Communist plots and propaganda. It would seem clear that if the Soviet Government wishes to demonstrate to the world the merits of its Communism, it must teach its lesson first by peace and prosperity at home, and keep the Third Internationale and its works from the backyards of other nations. and its works from the backyards of other nations.

THE march of modern science from the spinning-jenny of Hargreaves THE march of modern science from the spinning-jenny of Hargreaves and Arkwright, which precipitated the industrial revolution, to the steamboat of Fulton, which ultimately bridged the oceans, to the telegraph, wireless, and radio of later invention, which have linked all lands into intimate contact, is making the nations of the world almost as interdependent as the peoples within the nations. It is this growing interdependence that gave pre-eminent significance to the International Economic Conference which was brought to a close last week under the auspices of the League of Nations.

League of Nations.

Gathered at Geneva were more than 1000 delegates from 46 countries, seated about their respective conference tables to consider how economic rivalries, jealousies and pressures, which have been at the base of so much conflict in the past, could be supplanted by a co-operative commerce. Three non-members of the league, the United States, Russia and Turkey.

Russia and Turkey, were present. Only two nations were not represented— Spain and Liberia. The principal made to the furtherance of a more co-ordinated commerce was the channel which it fire discussion of diverse economic policies, and for the approach of these problems by way of economic facts and not political prejudices. The European delegates pointed significantly to the freedom of trade that prevails throughout the broad area of the United States, and at the close of the gathering departed determined to find a basis upon which to lower the tariff walls which obstruct the flow of commerce between the nations of Europe, a problem which marked the crux of the conference.

THE Monitor's correspondent in Geneva wrote lately that "everybody wants to know the causes of America's prosperity." While it is clear that no single formula can explain the continued economic progress of the United States and the high standards of living, two recent incidents shed, by way of contrast, an interesting light upon the question. In Italy Benito Mussolini was faced with rising prices which appeared to threaten the economic stability of the nation. To meet this condition a compulsory basic costs. Coincident with Mussolini's announcement, Henry M. Robinson, the chief United States delegate at the International Economic Conference, replying to the query concerning American prosperity, attributed it to the widespread policy of meeting competition, not by wage reduction, but by improving the wage level through increased efficiency of management and machinery, and thus strengthening the buying power of the consumer. The conditions are probably not wholly analogous, but the opposite methods taken to attain the mutually desired end of industrial well-being offers a valuable experiment that should be studied in parallel.

The consensus of reports both from the scenes of the flood, and from official sources in Washington indicates that prompt relief and a well-ordered plan of restoration will go for-ward without the need of a special session of Congress. Agricultural credit, the prime re-quirement of the entire flood area, is being rapidly extended under the supervision of the Federal Farm Board and by private corporations. Government engineers and the Mississippi River Commission will have pre-pared by the opening of Congress in Decem-ber a draft plan for the effective prevention of the recurrence of such a disaster.

URRENT news dispatches touching France, Great Britain, and the United States emphasize a growing cordiality of relations between these countries—a cordiality rising above the mists of transient politics. The visit which Gaston Doumergue, President of the French Republic. paid to King George last week gives assurance of Anglo-French harmony, and seals further the entente cordiale which, while occasionally strained, has bound Great Britain and France in friendship for nearly a quarter of a century. Germany, it is reported, is viewing the re-cementing of the entente with suspended judgment, concerned lest the increasing amity of Downing Street and the Quai d'Orsay might be against its interests. Second thought, it seems likely, will dissipate this suspense, since Germany has not prospered more than when friendship has supplanted friction between London

SURVEY TO SHORTEN

Park Board Begins Beautify ing Chicago Shore Boulevard Special from Monitor Bureau

CHICAGO, May 28—Further beau-tification of the recently completed uter drive, which follows the Lak Michigan shore line a few feet from the water between the down-town district and the south side of this city, is being accomplished by plant-ing of hundreds of American elm rees on both sides of the boulevard.
A significance of the improvement s that until recent electrification of the suburban service of the Illi-nois Central Railroad adjacent to the motorway, the South Park commissioners regarded as futile any attempts to grow trees because of cinders, soot and smoke. But with elimination of that handicap and with more intensive efforts by sn inspectors of the city the park com missioners felt justified in experi menting by planting elms along th highway, adding a touch of bright ness to the brown pavement and

They are hopeful, too, of success it was stated. The plan is to plant trees along both sides of the two drives in Grant Park, which sepawhere formerly gray mud and cin ders covered the surface, now have a luxurious growth of grass.

Vocational Office Finds Increasing Proportion of Working Students

With examinations drawing to a close, and the academic year almost at an end, except for the annual commencement exercises in June the busiest season of the year, with one possible exception, has arrived for at least one member of the executive staff at Boston University. That person is Norman Abbott, in charge of vocational work at the College of Business Administration.

SHIP FIRM PREDICTS BRITISH TRADE GAIN

Company Receives Statement

That a definite recovery in British trade and industry has set in. and that shipping is certain to share in the improvement during the coming year, is the opinion expressed by high officials of the Royal Steam Packet Company, recent buyers of the White Star line, according to statements received at the local office of the line, 90 State Street. The annual meeting of the line was held in London Wednesday, and the shareholders confirmed the recommendation of the court of directors for a dividend of 4 per cent for 1926. Lord Kylsant, chairman of the company, addressed the meeting, divulging some facts regarding the re-cent purchase of the White Star Line by the Royal Mail. His speech revealed that, following the failure of the Shipping Board to approve the contract negotiated in 1919, by the Royal Mail, for the purchase of the ternational Mercantile Marine Company's British tonnage, negotiations had been continued from time to time, eventually culminating in the acquisition of the White Star Line.

PROHIBITION'S ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL EFFECTS

the National Safety Council, the country's leading organization atudying the safety problem, replied definitely that: "There are no figures available to prove either one way or the other the effect of prohibition

Questionnaire to Industrial Concerns

In the first article of this series, details were given of a survey made by-sending out questionnaires to a representative list of hundreds of the country's largest and most progressively managed concerns. The fol-dowing section was included on the matter of the relation of prohibition to safety:

ACCIDENTS CAUSED BY EXCESSIVE DRINKING Have you observed any change in the character or frequent idents in your plant since prohibition? Check one item in each c

Any explanation that would throw light on your answer above.

Can you supply statistics of accidents which will support your ervations as given above? Check one of the following:
I sam supplying statistics in columns 1 to 7 below.
I have none compiled but the records available may repay further study

It will be noted in this questionnaire that the question about accidents was so framed that executives might be able to dodge only the second part of the question, asking for statistics, but could not very well avoid checking one of the four replies in the first part. Hence, we were assured of some returns, even if they were based solely on observations and first-hand knowledge not appearing in statistical records.

Results from Questionnaire Survey

As a result, we have first-hand observations by the men at the industrial front. Summarizing all the written replies received, the answer begins to be significant. First: Of 223 replying in writing (and of many others personally visited), not a single concern answering the questionnaire (and not a single concern personally visited) makes the statement that since prohibition there has been an increase in indus-Itrial accidents due to intoxication. This is rather astonishing, in view of the fact that so many have, in previous articles of this series, decried the poisonous nature of the stuff available to the unreformed worker. However, not many felt sure enough of the causes to attribute any change one way or the other to liquor. Two hundred and twenty-three concerns answered this question on the questionnaire; 102 concerns, constituting the largest group, checked the square marked "No noticeable change"; 47 reported a large reduction chiefly or partly due to prohibition; 27 others claimed a small reduction chiefly or partly due to prohibition; 41 additional concerns reported reductions, stating that reasons other than prohibition were responsible for the favorable showing; and six concerns have had increases in accidents which they stated to be for reasons having no connection with prohibition,

Difficulties of Tracing Accidents to Drink

The reasons given for the replies make them more understandable. Safety men, employment managers and production managers pointed out certain insurmountable difficulties in determining when an accident

A man might have overindulged in liquor the night before, and come to work nervously unstrung. But when the injury occurred, the direct evidence of liquor had by that time worn off. How classity him in such an instance? Even if a man was drunk when he came to it would not be recorded on the books, because if he slipped by the gate and the foreman, every official concerned would, in self-defense, try to hide that fact. The tendency in all cases would be not to favor the accident insurance company as against the poor fellow who got hurt. In the final analysis, since a breath of liquor is no indication of drunkenness, how know when an accident was due to drunkenness and when

When Is a Man Drunk!

Authorities have always had trouble in determining just when a man could be considered drunk. In October, 1925, the British Medical Association made this a matter of special investigation, appointing a committee of doctors, police officials, magistrates and natural scien-tists to agree upon a definition of the word "drunk." This momentous subject took a good deal of their time and attention, and after profound deliberations, the committee agreed on the following: "Drunkenness should always be taken to mean that the person concerned was much under the influence of alcohol as to have lost control of his faculties to such an extent as to render him unable to execute safely the occupation on which he was engaged at the material time." This, however, did not solve the question even in the minds of the committee, for they issued elaborate interpretations pointing out that it was not a question as to how much a man had drunk, but of whether certain effects could be determined. Among the tests that were regarded as indicating whether a man was drunk or not was the repetition o certain words and phrases, walking a straight line, and the character of the handwriting. Thus one can see what a really complicated problem it is to know when anything that has occurred is due to drunken

The reality of all these difficulties is seen in the fact that scores of large companies claim that they have never had a single accident recorded as due to drink, although they feel sure that liquor was probably an occasional factor. One of the largest railroads in the East states that "we never had accidents we could directly ascribe to intoxicants." A large car manufacturing company of Illinois states that "in twenty years we never had an accident known to be due to drunk-

The up-to-date plants, which had long before prohibition adopted means to prevent men who were under the influence of liquor from entering upon work, were least likely to see a difference. The chief surgeon of a steel-working plant in the middle West is one of many when he states: "We have not been able to determine that prohibition thad any effect on our accidents. There has been a gradual decrease in the number of accidents and the amount of lost time for the past several years, the rate of decrease apparently not being affected by the advent of prohibition

Many Plant Executives Credit Prohibition

It is obvious that the only information available on the relation of liquor to accidents is that of superintendents and executives dealing closely enough with their workers day by day to observe condition which may not appear on records, but of which they are reasonably sure. If employers were to state that they had observed more accidents among men who drank, we should regard it as significant Instead fully a third of the concerns credit prohibition as being one factor in accident reduction, and not a single employer claims it has increased the accident severity of his plant.

Many of these replies are in positive tones. A St. Louis machinery manufacturer who states that now his plant has no accidents which can be traced to liquor, asserts: "Previous to prohibition many accidents were caused by 'next day after' effects." A construction concern in New York, claiming "an unquestionable reduction in the absences due to inebriety," explains: "During pre-prohibition days, an examination of our accident reports showed such an increased number of accidents on Mondays and the day after pay days that one could pick out pay days without difficulty. This condition has totally disappeared since

A manufacturer of carpet sweepers, of Grand Rapids, has these interesting facts to relate: "I am a member of the Board of Directors of the Furniture Mutual Insurance Company of this city, which takes care of the workmen's compensation liability for all the furniture factories and kindred industries here. Through the records of that in-stitution we know that much less time is lost since prohibition became a law, and the accidents that used to happen before 10 o'clock in the morning of each Monday as a result of 'hang-overs' from dissipation of the day before are now almost nil.'

Official Opinion Credits Prohibition as Factor

The official opinion of heads of accident boards and other authorities seems to be that prohibition has reduced accidents. Mr. F. M.

Loveman, Joseph and Loeb BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA

Wilcox, chairman of the Industrial Commission of Wisconsin, who attributes an observed improvement partly to prohibition, writes: "There was a time when use of liquor was commonly referred to as the cause of accidents, in these later years, that is rarely given as a cause, and we no more hear the complaints of employers that Monday morning brings its flock of industrial accidents as the overhang of Sunday debauches." The same kind of testimony comes from Mr. Clark B. Day, manager of the California State Compensation Insurance Fund. An industrial executive gives as his experience the following: Some years ago, while I was Commissioner of Labor, I arranged to have a big corporation set up a discharge penalty in one of its foundries for any man who wis discovered drinking or under the influence of liquor while on duty. In this foundry the number of accidents was materially lessened." materially lessened."

Prohibition Only One Factor

To anyone acquainted with the safety movement, it is obvious that prohibition cannot have been more than one of the incidental causes in accident reductions. Some of the more thoughtful executives point this out, calling attention to increased effort in developing mechanical safeguards, better safety education and the greater insistence upon pre-

Some give the whole credit to these other factors. One of these is an executive in a smelting and refining firm with a remarkable reduc-

I do not believe that prohibition nor non-prohibition has had any preciable influence upon it. We have a well-organized and strongly I do not believe that promistion nor non-promotion has had any appreciable influence upon it. We have a well-organized and strongly maintained safety and welfare organization. After the armistice we were left with large stocks of metals on our hands, which necessitated a large reduction of our working force. We retained the most experienced and reliable men during the long slump which followed, and our replacements were, so far as possible, from former employees in whom we had confidence.

Difficult Comparisons

It may occur to someone that since it is so hard to disentangle the industrial accidents due to liquor from industrial accidents in general, perhaps some idea of the trend might be obtained from the trend of all accidents occurring. There is almost nothing in that approach. To draw any conclusions on liquor as a factor in accidents by studying the figures for all accidents is enormously to exaggerate the importance of the liquor factor. Furthermore, all we have in accident statistics are crude figures, unrelated to the equally important aspects of ours worked, productivity of industry, and other related variables. For instance, when mechanical means and machinery displace hand labor, there are, in most cases, increased hazards to the opera-

Commissioner Ethelbert M. Stewart, of the United States Departmen of Labor, has repeatedly warned against comparisons in crude accident figures. As he has well stated, in the United States Monthly Labor Review, of August, 1926:

The crude number of accidents reported in one year might by section excess of the accidents reported the year before, but this would no necessarily mean that accidents were increasing. In order to any this question we must have complete and accurate reports on first, the number of accidents; second, the amount of exposure to the hazards of industry.

The accidents of 1925 have apparently exceeded those of 1924 as certainly the accidents of 1923 greatly exceeded those of 1922. A careful statistician will ask two questions before he attempts to answer the question as to whether or not accidents are increasing: First, "Are there more men et work, or were men working more hours in 1923 and 1924 than they did in 1921 and 1922?" In other words, is there a greater manhour exposure and what is the relation of the number of accidents and of man-hour exposure now than formerly? An increase in recorded accidents may mean a greater volume of men at work. It may mean better reporting.

Aside from these inherent industrial difficulties, changes in each state in the legal requirements relating to the reporting of accidents make huge differences in the totals from year to year. When, in 1920, Maryland reduced the "waiting period," (during which no accident compensation is allowed) from two weeks to three days, the number of accidents reported for compensation naturally took a sudden leap. The same is true elsewhere. The chief of the Bureau of Industrial Acci-

An industrial accident in Illinois as far as we know anything about it, is one that is reported to the Industrial Commission. The scope of the Workmen's Compensation Act has been steadily enlarged. There has not been a session of the Illinois Legislature at which some amendment increasing the number of reported accidents has not been passed. Moreover, the commission has been increasingly successful in getting employers to report accidents.

Hence, crude statistics for accidents as a whole cannot play a part in

Nothing more definite emerges from the large amount of labor put into the study of this question than the observations of official organizations and industrial executives. The most significant fact on the issue as to whether liquor has become less of a factor in industrial accidents or more is that fully one-third of all the industrial executives, and practically all official authorities, credit prohibition with reducing accidents due to liquor, while not a single person encountered, whether personally against prohibition or not, claims that it has made accidents more frequent. In any event, as against the attention which was given the liquor factor in accident prevention a decade ago, as a subject for discussion today it has become passé.

So the present election struggle is a mock combat, a dissembled contest. Men fight under borrowed colors and fill the ranks of "foreign legions." There is no one dominating issue, for the real ideal is not expressed. The coming elections are not much more than a struggle for places in Parliament.

On one side is the dominant party, the Democratic Entents, led by Dr. Laptcheff. This is composed of three distinct groups: first, the former National Party, made up of bankers and rich men, gentlemanly, cultured, conservative; then a little body of reserve officers, widely regarded as a rather sinister group; and finally, the former Democrats.

> Former Premiers Urge Men of City to Get Allotments

LONDON—Two former Prime Min-sters who, speaking politically and guratively, are expert "fence men-lers" and "tillers of the soil"—David Lloyd George and J. Ramsay Mac-Donald—have issued their opinions on gardening for the benfit of the National Union of Allotment Hold-ers which is to open an exhibition here next September.

Mr. Lloyd George states that "backyards are a poor substitute for gardens. But every town can, by making proper provision for allot-ments, make good a fundamental dements, make good a fundamental defect in the organization of towns as we have allowed them to come into existence in the British Isles.

No town can think that it has done its duty to its inhabitants until its forum rejected a constitution providing for that form of rule.

The students, previous to last March, were governed by a senior council which acted in advisory can find both recreation and profit in digging the ground and gathering of the fruits of the earth.

"The time has passed when so great a movement can be satisfied to consult it before placing a with existing on sufferance. Land for allotments should be permania.

nently marked down for that use and no other. Our towns everywhere should take pride in providing security of tenure for allotments as in finding sites for houses and open spaces. I hope Parliament in the mear future will take adequate measures to establish the allotment movement on a permanent basis."

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's statement is to the effect that: "Allotments are not only good for the production of food—a very necessary thing in itself—but they are the most delightful recreation and labor, and have a fine effect on the personal qualities and social characters of men. As a rival attraction to the flashy and degrading allurements of town life, they are incomparable.

A-B-C BATTERY ELIMINATION IS DESCRIBED

High Current Rectifier Used With Series Filament Connections

The ultimate ideal of radiocast reception, namely, maximum efficiency at the flip of a socket-power switch is now an accomplished fact. With the advent of high current capacity tubes, such as the Raytheon BA rectifier tube, there is now available a single radio power unit capable of supplying the A, B and C requirets of standard tubes from one to a dozen if necessary. A single source, drawing virtually inexhaust ible and steady energy from the nearest electric light socket or con-venient outlet, serves all the circuits filaments, various high voltages for the B or plate circuits, and the grid blasing or C potentials, thus freeing the radio listener for all time from the yoke of battery maintenance testing and replacement. The completely electrified receiver, once looked upon as a difficult engineering and production feat, is now within the reach of all who enjoy the convenience of electric lights in their

Series Filament Idea

Of the various methods aimed at operating vacuum tube filaments on socket power, none is as simple and as efficient as the series filament arrangement, whereby high-voltage, low-current energy, such as is available from a heavy-duty B-eliminator, is employed. Not quite two years ago rectifiers were developed with an output of 85 milliamperes at 200 volts, for the purpose of operating tube filaments in series on rectified and filtered current.

However, with this limited output, only the 199 type of tube, requiring but a 60-milliampere current, could be operated. Furthermore, little additional current capacity was available for the B or plate requirements of the tubes, especially when using a large power tube in addition. Nevertheless, this arrangement was hailed as the first practical solution of the A-eliminator problem, and to-day there are various commercial receivers, as well as countless homereceivers, operating in this simple manner.

Maximum radio efficiency demands the use of the large 201A type of tube, with its greater capacity for work, together with its far greater ruggedness. Hence research workers and engineers continued their labors, seeking to evolve a service of complying several terms of the services of complying several terms. rectifier capable of supplying several times the rectified output of the BH, so as to be capable of an output of 250 milliamperes or one-fourth ampere for the 201A tubes arranged in series, plus an ample high-voltage current for the B or plate re-quirements of these tubes as well as for the 112 or 171 type of power

The result of 18 months of unrelenting effort is now presented in the Raytheon BA. This tube resembles the other members of the Raytheon family, with the exception of the A or cartridge rectifier, but has a considerably larger bulb. It is capable of a filtered output of 350 the Stromberg Carlson Hour to be milliamperes at 200 volts, or ample for the requirements of the tube filafine the requirements of the tube filaments of a multitube receiver of the work headed by WJZ at 8 o'clock most elaborate variety, together with the heaviest prate or B drain including that for a 171 power tube. In conjunction with the proper choke conjunction with the proper choke conjunction with the proper choke to give his listening suddence moderate. The Ray-

Complication Avoided The arrangement of tube filaments in series, instead of the conventional parallel arrangement, offers no serious complications. The object is, of course, to reduce the current by increasing the voltage of the requisite supply. It should be noted that filaments connected in parallel, or the standard arrangement, require a current which is the sum of all the filaments in the circuit, while the voltage remains the same as that for a single fil-ament. Contrariwise, with seriesconnected filaments, the current re-mains the same as for a single fil-ament, while the voltage is the sum of all the filaments.

In rectifying and filtering operations, it is far easier to handle increased voltage, within reason, than increased current. That fact ex-plains why the B-eliminator became a commercial success long before the A-eliminator. Increased current calls for larger condensers and larger choke coils, which are costly as well as bulky. The condensers alone, for instance, are about 400 times more effective at 200 volta the filter condensers for the lower larger and more costly for the low-voltage, high-current requirements of parallel-connected filaments.

The circuit for the Raytheon B follows the conventional Ratheon circuit, except for the more elaborate resistance network necessary for the distribution of the output to the various circuits. A transformer with a secondary full-load voltage of 320 a secondary full-load voltage of 320 m.m.s. volts each side of the center tap, is required, together with the 0.1 mfd. buffer condensers. The filter circuit comprises one 4 mfd. and two 8 mfd. condensers of sufficient worka mid. consensers or sumcient working voltage, together with two 10henry choke colls with a.d.c. resistance not exceeding 165 ohms, and no lower than 300 ohms for the pair as

Agrarian League Holds Big Convention in Stara Zagora

Bulgarian Peasant Organization Said to Have Passed Through Period of Great Persecution and to Be Left Without Competent Leaders

There are at present 1260 "druzh-bas," or local Agrarian groups, in the country, and more than 1000 people were in attendance at the convention. Most of them were ac-tual tillers of the soil, poor, un-ahaven, dressed in peasant costumes. The majority of the delegates were young people, ardent, restless, inex-perienced, uncompromising, deterined at all costs to put the Agrarian League on its feet and to make it once more a power in Bulgarian

FARRELL LEADS LEAGUE AT BAT

Former Pennsylvania Star Is Hitting Above the .400 Mark

CHICAGO, May 28 (P)-E. S. Farrell, young shortstop with the New York National League Baseball Club, has climbed to the front as the leading batter of the National League. The former University of Pennsylvania star by consistent hitting since the start of the season today finds himself looking down on some well-known heavy hitters, including the renowned Rogers Hornsby. Farrell has a mark of .412 attained in 32 games in which he made 49 hits for a total of 67 bases, having three home runs and nine doubles.

Within a week Farrell raised his average from 393 as the result of spetting seven hits in six games. The figures are based on games including fwednesday and are of players who participated in 25 or more games. Close behind the New Yorker is Traynor of Pittsburgh, who raised his averave 51 points from 340 to 391 and is ranking next to Farrell. Hornsby, who dropped down a week ago, increased his mark a point during the week and has 377 for fourth place. Harper, also of the Giants, is third with 379.

Cuyler Leads Base-Stealers

Cuyler, fleet-footed Pittsburgh outfielder, is setting a merry pace among the base-stealers with 14, a gain of four since a week ago. Frisch of the Cardinals is his closest rival with 16.
Pittsburgh replaced the Glants in team batting with an average of .306, the Glants having dropped to second place with .300, while the Phillies continue to hold third place with £89.

Other leading batters: P. Waner,
Pittsburgh, .360; High, Boston, .343;
Wright, Pittsburgh, .341; Frisch, St.
Louis, .339; Hafey, St. Louis, .339; Barrus, Boston, .338; Lindstrom, New York, .332; Southworth, St. Louis, .333.
Edmund Miller of St. Louis made another gain during the week to cause a lot of American League hitters some concern. He continued his fine batting with seven hits in six games, and really is the leader of the League with an average of .417, although Schange, his teammate, is two points above him, but he did not appear in any games furing the week.

Miller has performed in 32 games, been at bat 96 times and made 40 hits to compile his high average. Gehrig, star first baseman with the Yankees,
who was leading a week ago, with .425, dropped down to third place with .408.
Goslin of the Senators on returning to the game after a brief absence moved ahead of Gehrig with .411. Cobb is blazing the trail for the Athletics with .402, giving him fourth place among the leading hitters.

Football Precedents Broken in Arranging the 1927 Schedule

MADISON, Wis., May 28 (Specie-Football precedents were broken six-hour session of athletic director and coaches of the Intercollegis a six-hour session of athletic directors and coaches of the Intercollegiate Conference making the schedule of gridiron games for 1927 here yesterday. As a result, University of Michigan only four, while University of Michigan only four, while University of Chicago for the first time in years is to leave the Midway to play University of Wisconsin, and Indiana University of Wisconsin, and Indiana University secured two horne games. Insistence of Indiana on the home games caused the protraction of the meeting. Because of the small gate receipts to be expected at Bloomington, Indiana's opponents were not-anxious to play there. Ohio State University finally surrendered. The other home game is with Northwestern University finally surrendered. The other home game is with Northwestern University.

Three home games each were dated by University of Illinois, Minnesota, Michigan, Northwestern, Chicago and Ohio State. Intersectional games are scheduled by Northwestern with Dartmouth College, Chicago with University of Pennsylvania, and Ohio State with Princeton University, the eastern teams invading the West.

Minnesota has the biggest Conference schedule, Kingan, Northwestern, but it does not include the three teams which are usually most formidable, Michigan, Illinois and Ohio State. Its games are with Purdue, Chicago, Iowa, Northwestern, Indiana and Wisconsin, Michigan, on the other hand, with only four games, has a hard schedule with Ohio State, Wisconsin, Illinois and Iowa. It also has a game with the United States Naval Academy.

Basketball coaches of the Conference met this morning to arrange schedules for next season.

Unexpected opposition was encountered by O'Connell in his match with R. E. Shay '28 of Minnesota. He was forced to a decision of 6—3, 3—7, 1—6, 8—6, by Shay. The latter had just come through the third round by deferring J. C. Phillips '27 of Northwestern University, 6—1, 7—5, while O'Connell disposed of his third round engagement the day before.

Shay hit hard and forced the play from start to finish against O'Connell. The latter, an experienced tourney veteran, who knows when to relax and when to tighten up, won the first ext with fair case and then eased up. Shay caught him off guard and carried the battle to extra games. The struggle, to win the second set tired O'Connell and Shay went through the third set in short order by keeping O'Connell on the run. The latter, however, came back after a 10-minute rest to win the final set, though it went to extra games. Shay played hard but made more errors than the title defender.

Boldenweck who won his semifinal contest by a score of 6—1, 9—7, 3—6, 6—3, over Captain Bard of Illinois, displayed remarkable improvement over his form of previous appearances hand hard bitting proved too much for Bard, though the latter also played a better game than was expected. Bard mixed his shots more than ever before but Boldenweck who an advantage on covering distance. The summary:

The running broad jump was another event which furnished some of the best trial competition ever held by the association. It was necessary for the sixth man to jump over 23 feet to qualify, his actual performance being 23ft. 10% in. No less than 10 men cleared 23 feet or better while five of them bettered 24 feet.

The pole vault also furnished some brilliant competition. Over 12 of the contestants cleared 12ft. 6in., while the six who qualified cleared 12ft. 11% in.

LONDON, May 22. (P)—Miss Elizabeth Ryan, formerly of California, won the women's singles championship in the Middlesex tennis tournament today. She defeated Miss Joan Fry of England in the final, 6—0, 4—6, 6—2.

Mrs. F. I. Mallory of New York was eliminated by Miss Fry in the semifinals this morning, 6—4, 6—0. Miss Ryan came through the semifinals by defeating Miss Betty Nuthall, 6—3, 6—2.

MICHIGAN TAKES J. C. FARRELL WINS LEAD IN MEET

Qualifies 16 Men for the "Big Ten" Conference Track and Field Finals

MADISON, Wis., May 28 (Special)—
University of Michigan took a commanding start toward the capture of its third successive "Big Ten" outdoor track and field championship here yesterday when it qualified 16 men in the preliminary events of the annual Intercollegiate Conference meet, the finals of which will be held today.

University of Iowa placed next in position for honors by qualifying 10 men in the elimination contests. Every university in the Conference qualified at least one man and though a driving rain fell throughout the afternoon, times in several events were remarkably good. No records were broken, but Conference marks were approached by at least three athletes. Conclusion of the preliminaries left University of Illinois with nine men eligible for the finals. University of Wisconsin and Northwestern University eight each, Ohio State University seven, Indiana University and University of Chicago two and Purdue University of Chicago two and Purdue Universed in the conference did First Heat—Won by E. Takes Metropolitan in Close Battle With Cruickshank

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., May 28 Special)-In one of the closest and nost exciting finishes ever seen in a Metropolitan open golf championship tournament, J. C. Farrell, Quaker Ridge Golf Club, won the championship title on the links of the Wykagyl Golf Club yesterday with a card of 296 for the 72 holes of medal play. R. A. Cruickshank of the Progress Golf Club was second with 297, these two golfers being the only ones who turned in cards of better than 300.

At the start of the last round of 18 holes, Cruickshank was leading with a card of 219 one stroke better than Farrell's. This lead he increased to 3 holes with only three left to go and he appeared an almost sure winner; but at the seventieth hole his game suddenly fell off while Farrell played steady golf and came through to victory. At the last hole Farrell made a 16-foot put for a par 5, while Cruickshank missed a six-foot put for a 6.

William Burke of the Greenwich Country Club and August Nordone, unattached, who finished the first 18 holes tied for first with cards of 71, finished the tournament in a tie for fourth and twenty-third positions respectively with cards of 305 and 317. Joseph Turnesa, Elmsford Country Club, who led at the end of 36 holes, finished in a tie for sixth with a card of 306. The cards of those bettering on the links of the Wykagyl Golf

WIGHTMAN CUP PLAY EARLIER

Tennis Matches With England to Start at Forest Hills, Aug. 12

NEW YORK, May 28 (P)—The Wightman Cup tennis matches of 1927, to decide the women's team championship annually contested between the United States and England, will be played at the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, N. Y., on Friday and Saturday, Aug. 12 and 13.
This was announced today by the international play committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Associatervention of about a week between the international team matches and the women's national championships events. The change was proposed by several of the leading woman players.

All matches since the cup was placed in competition in 1923 have been played either at Forest Hills or at Wimbledon in England. America won the 1923 match at Forest Hills and England reversed the tables in 1924 at Wimbledon. In 1925 and 1926 each team won in its opponent's country, the United States now holding the cup.

Year by year the competition has

ST. CLOUD, France, May 28 (P)—Francis T. Hunter, United States star, was eliminated from the international hardcourt tennis championship tournament today by P. D. B. Spence. The South African player won at 3—6, 2—6, 6—1, 6—3, 6—2.

Hunter started off in fine fashion against Spence and won the first two sets through superior driving, but soon tired.

Spence outstayed the American in a montonous baseline duel in which Hunter committed numerous errors. HALL MAKES TWELVE EVENTS IN ONE DAY

NEW MAVEN, Conn., May 28 (P)—Completing 12 events in one day, Norman S. Hall of Asbury Park, N. J., a freshman track star at Yale, established what is believed to be a record in qualifying for membership in Sigma Delta Phi, honorary athletic fraternity.

Sigma Delta Phi, honorary athletic fraternity.

In the annual meet with Harvard 1930 Hall took firsts in the high hurdles, javelin throw and shotput. His tests yesterday included the one-mile run, the 100-yard swim in 77s., pole vaulting 8ft. 6in., hurdling, broad jumping, putting the shot, throwing the javelin and others.

Hall was a track star at Roxbury, where he prepared for Yale, scoring 13 points in the 1925 Yale interscholastics. He has been a consistent winner on the Yale freshman team. Only one sophomore qualified for the fraternity, completing the tests in one year.

The extent to which art objects and furniture are disposed of at auctions in the great cities may not be realized by the public in general. At a single gallery in New York, that of the American Art Association, almost 50 sales have been held during the past season. These have brought in a little more than $6,250,000.

The most popular classes of ob-jects, judging by the quantity han-dled, are the Spanish and the Italian, for this group accounted for nearly one-third of the total receipts at the galleries mentioned.

Early American Children's Furniture

No examples of early American furniture that have come down to us are more appealing than the little pieces made for children, following with delicious fidelity in their miniature scale, every line and detail of their larger prototypes. In the collections of American antiques assembled by Au Quatrieme during recent weeks may be seen an unusual number of these charming and far from common miniature pieces.

The little slant-top pine desk illustrated is really a doll's desk. But a larger one of maple with the original brasses is for a child. As are also a very early type of oak chest with molded base and cornice, chamfered corners and bun feet, and a miniature pine chest of very primitive character.

Baby Chairs and Cradles

Here, too, are several exceedingly quaint low rush-seated baby chairs of the type illustrated, high-chairs with slat backs, and two every interesting maple cradles.

The Umbrella Man and the Parrot

Sand and the state of the sand

By FRANCES M. WARN

HE old umbrella man was a little bent and his smile was a little bent, too. Sue and Bob liked to look into his tiny shop window and watch him mend umbrellas. They felt sorry for him, because his kind face was not at all happy.

"Wish we could see him smile," bald Sue one day as they peeked into the window.

There would be good business for him that day. After school, on their way home, they stopped to see him. "Any butter today?" asked Sue, gayly.

"Only bread," answered the old man, trying to smile. "Did you try?" asked businesslike Bob.

"When nobody came I walked."

"We like to see you work," explained Bob.

"And we like all the queer handles and funny ribs and pieces you have hanging on these nails," added Sue.

"It is very curious that such odd things fitted together make umbrellas."

Sue running after him and demanding to know his scheme.

The umbrella man straightened up his little shop and locked the door. He didn't know what Bob could have meant, but he could not accept help from children. He would still earn his way.

The umbrella man glanced up briefly as they stepped inside, and went on mending an umbrella. He was fixing a huge, uneven tear. Bob and Sue were delighted with the way the odd-shaped patch settled down into place and sort of grew into the rest of the umbrella.

Polly Parrot scolded for a while and flew about the little room knocking over umbrellas, swinging the handles and upsetting things gen-erally. Finally, he flew to the open door and stuck his head out. A rain drop hit him on the face. He ruf-fled up his feathers, shook himself

Jean asked.

"No," Uncle Ned answered. "I mean are they happy people or are they sad? Are they children or grown-ups?"

"Oh, I know the music can tell me that," Jean said. She noticed that Uncle Ned set the needle well into the middle of the record-disk. The music came in a great burst of tone. Jean stepped back from the phonograph. Uncle Ned stepped back too—"Yes" he nodded, "we can see the people better from here."

"That music is much too big for children," Jean decided, but she didn't speak until it ended; then she was ready with an answer. "They was ready with an answer. "They curate representation or camera-like copying of nature had long been held. Instead of attempting to pre-sent a copy of the scene—that is, a magnified easel painting—why not a magnined easer painting—with not produce a stage picture that projected the idea of scene? Since a tree wilts when transferred from the orchard to a stage setting, and the orchard to a stage setting, and a realistic picture of a tree makes you think not of a tree but of a painting, why not produce something else, something that shall be of art rather than nature? Then you will have something with an integrity of its own, pretending to be nothing but itself, and yet serving completely the purpose of background as something significant and beautiful?

Once this type of background came significant and beautiful?

Once this type of background came into increasing use it found acceptance, though some early efforts were puzzling and even annoying. The notion that the settings could be significant in themselves was carried so far that a fad for "expectation!" pressionist" scenery flourished briefly and indulged in weird excesses. This scenery was so in-sistent and queer that it quite out-faced the actors, and eclipsed the play. This phase quickly passed of its own accord, because the theater-going public was not getting what it went to the playhouse for, an acted play, with everything serving that effect.

This eccentric, or shall we say, emotional scenery did find a place for itself in such satirical enter-tainments as Balleff's "Chauve-Souris," and here such "expression-ist" settings were appropriate, for they were part of an animated cartoon. We all know how the name of a caricature is heightened by the ing in trees, stones, hills, moon and sun of the emotions of the human figures in the scene. Thus in the backgrounds of the "Chauve-Souris" turns the very houses seemed to lean this way and that,

The Reasons for Summer Camps

In the educational program of today, summer camps are playing an important part.

They supplement the school work with recreation which is designed to provide not mere merriment, but to train the youth in good citizenship, to arouse in them a love for the great out-of-doors, to help them develop self-reliance, and to teach them to play not for their own glorification, but for the benefit of the entire group.

Expert instruction in swimming, horseback riding, tennis and other sports is usually pro-vided. All activities of the camp are carried on under the direction of trained counselors.

More than a thousand organized camps are now scattered here and there over the country, in the distant wilderness, on some sequestered island, or on the wooded shore of a lake. Many of these camps are advertised in The Christian Science Monitor.

To learn more about the special features and rates of any camp advertised in the Monitor, send to its

Was quite unknown to him, and when he was forced to listen to some pieces of classical music which he could not help finding heautiful when outstanding composers such as Stravinsky and his followers began to look back to seek lowers began to look back to past centuries to find their way for the future, it was clear that extravagances in contemporary music had st ground. We were on the point of becoming normal. But let us not triumph too soon. There are young who, far from walking in people who, far from waiting in the footsteps of Stravinsky and those who proclaim the past as guide for the future, emphasize their radicalism and expect great things

Entering the small concert hall of the Vox house, we find it crowded with people who are ready to ex-perience musical adventures of the most daring kind. We are guests of the well-known November-Group, where radicalism has, for the last decade, found its home. A public of painters and of musicians is seated round small tables. The November-Group apparently generates other small groups. All of them have a different opinion about the compositions which are being performed on

The Law of Movement

One of the laws of art is that of novement. Thematic development as established by the sonata form is the expression of movement in music. Or rather: was. For everysonata form had to resist many attacks from the side of the composers. Firstly, the three or four movements of the sonata were replaced by one long movement. This was done by Franz Liszt. He aimed at giving a complete unity by making one themse the subject of the first services. theme the subject of the ing one theme the subject of the whole. Most unhappily this plant, which was excellent, could not be fully realized owing to lack of musical imagination. The source of musical imagination. The source of musical imagination. The source of musical imagination are some there are some the source of enough to irrigate a great work.

After many experiments with the one-subject sonata the composers went back to the four movements. which also was the basis of the symphonic form. It remains doubtwhether it was symphony that vice versa. Most probably it was the extra-musical substance of music that gave rise to these experiments in form.

Arnold Schönberg came, and the foundations of musical form were vehemently shaken. But he himself did not know how to replace the old architecture by a new one, till, after the experimental music of his middle period, he arrived at his new system of 12 tones, which have to erve as the constructive material of his music. Schönberg, the ardent admirer of Beethoven, as is proved by his two string quartets, thinks to by his two string quarters, thinks to have won, by this means, a new and certain method of composition in great forms. He believes to have, in this way, renewed the Beethovenian

Development Given Up

The young composers, whom we have come to listen to, are of different opinion. They have decided to give up thematic development and to make music which they call "stationary." They know very well take home the impression of an art Jacques Ibert's one-act musical that is strong enough to suppress farce, was not only the biggest sucwhat is a result of linear and harmonic movement. Are these musicians as independmusic. But they have given up all that is experimental, replacing it by what they think to be definite to musical support to the probably have a presentation by and solidly constructed art. It is theil and of Henry Cowell that has life, movement and variety. One led them to the new form of composition which they employ; the mechanical style and the use of both all the resources of the orchestra fingers and arms are characteristic of their style.

The most gifted of these young composers undoubtedly is Stefan skill. Striking proof of this can be Wolpe. He is, so to speak, radical by found in the scene between Anbirth and character. When I first knew him, some years ago, he was the most dreadful player in private houses. While others gave their Beethoven, Schubert and Chopin, he raged over the keyboard with the latest Scriabin, who was for him the first of all composers. Of course, he also was composing at that time. His teacher, who was a musician of great merit, though of the old style, could not but acknowledge his gifts, which however he was unable to control. It was myself extremely interested by his talent, in spite of the difficulties he found in acquiring a technical basis for his art. Ther I lost sight of him till the other eve-ning, when he played to us. As a composer he had the weakness of forgetting sometimes the laws of mechanism. He showed some traces of Béla Bartók's influence, which made itself felt very favorably. For it led him to make, in the second movement of the sonata, music of a lyrical beauty I had never heard from NCE I had a friend who, at a shaggy countryside all precipitous time when there was apparently a great shortage of well suited to so very abrupt a slope dwelling houses, owned two hundred as a vase side. Into this dark coundwelling houses, owned two hundred delectable little residences of all sorts, slightly or wholly differing in architectural style. Even yet it gives me pleasure to remember those houses. Some of the cottages were very small, but they had little windows like eyes to which golden thatches served as lids; tiny doors of brown or blue; pillared porches trellised with soft greenery or covered with red roses. One or two of the larger houses were very elegant structures, not too massive, though moated, turreted and gilded, and with besides an imposing gateway.

One of the villas that I particuside a clump of trees or stare at one side a clump of trees or stare at one stare.

When Jesus had stilled the tempestuous waves which threatened to overthrow their little ship, the disciples "marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!" So complete was his mastery over the so-called forces of nature that he annulled and set aside the laws of matter, generally accepted by man-kind as irrevocable. And in numerous instances he destroyed the claims of evil. even when manifested in the most virulent types of disease, thus proving their nothingness. He exercised such evident authority that he could scarcely fail to impress the multitude of witnesses with his relationship to the divine

Whence came this authority? Was t inherent in the Master alone, a power especially bestowed upon him by divine dispensation; or was it due to an understanding of infinite power, which may be gained by all who obey the commands of God? The answers to these questions are contained in the Gospels themselves. Christ Jesus bestowed upon his disciples the same power which they exercised in degree as they understood his teachings. He taught the faithful disciples how they too could speak with authority to the seeming powers of evil, thus destroying their

These and many other indi-cations of autumn have been with us or weeks, yet, strange to say, I only realised it was autumn to-day. The golden leaves in the trees and the wagons coming in loaded with grey and yellow pumpkins bedded in grass had told me autumn was ap-proaching—one could not mistake that, of course—but I did not know

As I was going along towards the post office, after seeing the police-man looking for fruit in the hedges, I noticed the marks of a bicycle in the mud, the tracks curved and wobbled and crossed each other, and swayed from side to side of the road, then they went straight for a while, one wheel following the other in a single track, then, all at once, they commenced to curve again. . . . Eastern Railroad Stocks Make Good Showing in Active Market

By the Associated Press

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK, May 28—With a twoday recess pending, traders were disposed to lighten commissents at favorable opportunities in the stock market today, but the list revealed but few weak spots, and rose generally in a brisk manner under the impetus of inrgent short covering and aggressive pool operations.

While there were no news developments over night regarding rumors competitive buying of railroad shares, the heavy absorption of particular issues continued, notably Reading, Wabash and Chicago & Eastern Iillinois.
The first named sold above 121 to a new high record. Eastern railroad stocks, as a group, made the best showing, a new high also being registered by Jersey Central after climbing 8 points to 322.

Denials of competitive purchases of coal mining shares, which had a nocoeable advance yesterday, brought seeling which depressed Pennsylvania
Coal & Coke 5 points and Pittsburgh Coal nearly 3. Unfavorable business conditions were cited as reasons for liquidation in American Woolen preferred, which dropped to 47, a new minimum for the year.

The closing was firm. Total sales approximated 1,200,000 shares.

Foreign exchange opened steady, with demand sterling quoted around $4.85%, and French francs close to 3.91½ cents.

Trading was light in the short preholiday session of the bond market today, and numerous irregularities were noticed as traders continued to adjust their accounts. Price changes, however, were of a fractionally. Liquid Carbonic 6s and Kansas Gas 6s gained around half a point each.

Foreign issues were firm but quiet and United States Government obligations displayed practically no activity.

WEEK'S REVIEW OF BUSINESS AND FINANCE

Moderate Improvement Noted in Domestic Trade-Heavy Stock Market Trading

Business in the United States is progressing in an orderly manner, subject to the usual season influences. Steel, automobile and building industries are showing some decline in operations, but textiles, shoes and leather are improving.

The fact that business activity is so well maintained in the face of such adverse influences as the flood, coal strike and unsettlement in the oil industry attest the strength of underlying conditions.

The more important business indices The more important business indices show moderate improvement this week. Freight car loadings for the week ended May 14 totaled 1,029,126 cars, making the sixth week this year that loadings have exceeded the million-ear mark. This was an increase of 4710 cars over the preceding week, but 622 less than a year ago.

Steel trade reviews report that buying from small consumers is almost ing from small consumers is almost sufficient to offset the losses from the leading channels of consumption, such as the railroads, automobiles, the oil stry and agriculture. Production bout abreast of last year's record, holding at a satisfactory level.

Peak Seen in Auto Output

and holding at a satisfactory level.

Peak Seen in Auto Output

Automobile production has passed its peak, but no large decline in the average output for the industry is moted as yet. Increased schedules by two manufacturers have tended to offset slowing down in other plants; heavy curtailment, however, is expected in June due to new model plans and also to the desire to lower dealers stocks in preparation for the slower summer period.

Another, decrease in oil production was reported for the week ended May 21, bringing the daily average output down to 2478,000 barrels compared with the record high for all time of 2506,469 barrels for the week of May 7. Some progress was also made this week in the efforts to curtail production in the Seminole area. Twenty operators have agreed on a plan to hold back the bringing in of new wells in that district. It was found impractical, however, to stop the development of most of the wells now drilling so that the effect of the present plan will not be immediately felt.

Trade Volume Larger

Government figures show that the dollar volume of trade during the period, however, fell off and business failures were more numerous than in either the preceding week or the corresponding week last year. The volume of new building contracts awardes in 57 states during this period, however, fell off and business failures were more numerous than in the previous week, or a year ago.

The increase in business failures may be due to severe competition which is bearing most heavily on the smaller concerns. It is pointed out that the trend is toward larger enterprises where man production, greater efficiency, lower costs and advantages in buying and selling are enabling these larger, units to forge ahead, often at the expense of the smaller. This is one reason why there has been a buil market is stocks of some of the larger companies, and a bear market in the sequilate of government of the smaller. Heavy Speculation in Stocks.

Heavy Speculation in Stocks Speciliarye influences commanded the stock market this week. While the violent upward movement in a small group of stocks focused attention on the buil side, the market as a whole was a two-sided affair with advances and defines occurring simultaneously. Rallroads with serger possibilities were heavily bought and some of the stear stocks were also in good demand.

Trading was unusually heavy, sales on Thursday being the largest since Feb. 9. Brokers loans for the week ended May 18 showed an increase of $15,938,000.

Bond trading was restricted by the firmness in the money market and the uncertainty as to the June financing plans of the Treasury Department. Activity in Liberty Bonds was a fearness and was attributed to heavy Activity in Liberty Bonds was a feature, and was attributed to heavy switching from the Second Liberty 14 to the long term Fourth 44s. Convertible bonds scored some substantial gains, and some railroad bonds were also in demand. French bonds led the foreign list, with some good advances, and Polish issues were mixer, being influenced by the virtual conclusion of terms for a $70,000,000 loan.

nation is constantly shown by the varied action of the different securities.

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: The small floating supply of stocks of lightly capitalized companies is a very important factor in the sharp rises that have become daily occurrences. The public has apparently become reconciled to the idea that the market is to continue strong and is making commitments on the long side.

Tucker, Anthony & Co., New York: When and as reactions do appear, the market ought to be a "purchase" for another bullish display later on.

J. S. Bache & Co., New York: For a considerable period each day's transactions on the stock exchange have consisted of positive advances in some stocks and positive declines in others. And these advances and declines have each lay mainly been made by other stocks than those participating the day before. Throughout the irregularity which is manifested, the traders favorable to maintaining the market seem to have more power than the bears. Everyone is concerned, he must select stocks solely a real merit, present and prospective.

SHOW A FAIR GAIN

FALL RIVER, Mass., May 28 (Special)—Showing somewhat more activity than for nearly three weeks, the local cloth market sales total for the current week is 125,000 pleces, with trading being limited by the paucity of several desired constructions. Advances of a full eighth of a cent were registered in many of the wide styles, nearly all of the 36-inch goods, and the 25-inch materials and sateens. Business in the wide constructions was confined largely to the 38½-inch, 48 squares, and the 44x40s. The 36-inch styles sold readily, with delivery dates extending through September.

The demand for narrow goods was principally on the 25-inch, 40x32s, which brought from 3½-03½c. Sateens were only moderately active, but the better grades of 4:37s sold in quantity at 10%c, an advance of % over the week previous.

Other grains, especially corn and rye, scored as rapid gains as wheat; in fact, corn at times has been a leader.
Deterioration in the wheat crop southwest, especially in Kansas proved more extensive than supposed, and later reports indicated that the state would have about 100,000,000 bushels compared with 150,000,000 bushels a year ago. It was estimated also that the three states of Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas would have 160,000,000 bushels or only 10,000,000 bushels more than Kansas alone had in 1926.
These reports, coupled with the bull-

These reports, coupled with the bullish conditions in Canada where unfavorable weather has cut down the acreage sharply, gave the bulls all the ammunition they needed. It has rained in Canada nearly every day for a week or more, and wheat seeding is now about over for the season. Some of the Winnipeg authorities estimate the amount seeded from 16,000 to 17,000 acres compared with 27,500 acres a year ago.

17,000 acres compared with 27,500 acres a year ago.

The combination of bullish conditions both in our Southwest and in Canada made a hard proposition for the shorts. Moreover, the clearances of domestic wheat and flour reported for April were nearly 15,000,000 bushels shipped out in 10 months.

With even extremely small clearances during April and June, our surplus will be easily disposed of. Argentine and Australian weather has been unfavorable, with drought conditions

European crops generally are said to be in a favorable position, except for being late, cold weather and the spring having retarded growth of all

Persistent rainfall over the corn belt has made the average planting date extremely late in corn. In Illinois, Indiana and Ohio only a small percentage of the crop is in the ground. Iowa has about 60 per cent planted, while Nebraska and South Dakota are in good shape so far as corn planting is concerned.

Corn however, is still being planted in Kansas and Oklahoma. The cashdemand for corn has been moderate, but except for the lowest grades of cash corn, the price basis has continued strong, with May advancing rapidly as shorts covered.

Cash corn has presumably been Persistent rainfall over the corn rapidly as shorts covered.

Cash corn has presumably been resting in strong hands since the early month deliveries, and interests that paid for the cash corn then have made big profits in carrying the corn. The market is now a weather proposition, with every day shortening the growing season and with much plant-ing likely to be done in June. This will ing likely to be done in June. This will increase the crop hazards materially. Rye had a big jump in prices. This was due to the heavy shipments from Duluth and Hinneapolis, and to the chartering of about half the Chicago stocks and most of Milwaukee supplies to go out for export.

Oats have been backward but in the last few days have also shown signs of running into a real bull market.

Press of the World CIVIC REVIVAL NEEDED Arkansas Gazette: After expressing his sympathy with the prohibition law as a "great praiseworthy effort" to keep people decent, and help men do their duty by their families and spend their money on necessities, Ramsay MacDonald, former British Prime Minister, who has been visiting the United States, said he would like to see "a great moral appeal to all good citizens to respect the law."

That wish might well be echoed by all Americans and extended to 2. What is Freemasonry doing in by all Americans and extended to embrace laws other than the Vol-stead Act and obligations other than stead Act and obligations other than that of decent sobriety. We have always had religious revivals in the United States. Why not great civil revivals also? The country stands in need of them at the present time as never before. Such scandals as the senatorial primaries in Pennsylvania and Illinois last year were symptoms of a laxness which prevails and makes itself manifest also in a growing neglect of the duty of voting.

REWARD FOR WORK

Hamilton Spectator: It almost invariably follows that good work of any kind receives its reward. Sometimes it is true, the reward is not of the obvious kind; but it is there just the same. "One self-approving hour whole years outweighs of stupid starers and of loud hurrays." Whether our sincere and earnest efforts meet with praise and material Whether our sincere and earnest efforts meet with praise and material reward or not, they will always bring us a measure of compensation. Self-respect, most precious of all possessions, comes from the practice of doing one's best in every undertaking; while the sacrifice of self-respect is involved in the opposite policy of shirking responsibility and doing the least possible, and not doing even that well. We get out of life what we put into it—that is often said, and it is one of the truest bits of philosophy ever uttered.

The Fleet and Naval Limitation

S THE great battle and scouting fleet of Athe United States, which has been exercising in New England waters, disperses its units in all directions, the battleships going back to the Pacific Ocean, the scouts remaining in the Atlantic, the newspapers are filled with forecasts of the tripartite conference at Geneva for the further limitation of naval armaments.

The fleet now being broken up has been the most powerful naval force assembled since the days of the World War. Naval authorities declare that no other nation could today bring under one control so prodigious an array of fighting craft. There are nations possessing one or two battleships superior in power to the greatest in the American fleet. There are other nations better provided with battle cruisers, with submarines, or with bombing planes. But the authorities agree that, for well-rounded and symmetrical power, the fleet which today disperses can have no present equal on the face

Before the great battleships have passed the Panama Canal on the way to their Pacific station, the conference called by President Coolidge will be in session at Geneva. It will be made up of official representatives of Great Britain, Japan, and the United States, with probably unofficial representatives from France and Italy. It may well be inquired why the United States, whose naval authorities agree that it holds no second place upon the ocean, and the wealth and industrial power of which are such that it could easily outstrip all rivals in naval construction, should be the initiator of such a conference?

The answer is clearly that the people of the United States, though proud of their navy, and ready and even eager to support it on a parity with that of any other nation, are intelligent enough to see the economic folly of competitive naval building. They are fair-minded enough, too, to see that Great Britain with its far-flung dominions to which the trade routes must be open, and its densely populated British Islands, for which food must be constantly imported by water, must necessarily maintain a powerful navy for its own protection. The United States, too, with a frontier on two oceans, with its ownership of the Panama Canal, exposed to attack at either end, and with distant colonies which cannot be ignored, has need of a navy today as never before in its history. But if there is to be a steady contest between these two nations as to which one shall be the more powerful on the ocean, it will mean simply the constant and lavish expenditure of money drawn from the people by taxation in the con-struction of great battleships and auxiliaries which the one nation can eclipse as fast as the other constructs them. In such a race the United States, with its tremendous constructive power, need have nothing to fear except the sense of the utter futility and wastefulness of the expenditure.

The conference at Geneva, therefore, which the President has so wisely summoned, is not to be taken as in any sense hostile to the navy or to naval developments. It should rouse no antagonism among the friends of the navy either within or without the service. It simply seeks a counsel of reasonableness whereby the navies of the principal maritime nations shall be maintained at a practical parity, and the extravagance of ruinous naval construction shall be done away with. To this end it deserves the hearty support even of those who believe with The Christian Science Monitor that the navy is an arm of America's national power which deserves whole-hearted and generous

Correlated Industries

WERE it not for the fact that there is a tendency, whenever some particular or peculiar aspect of an economic problem is presented in a manner to magnify it or to emphasize its importance, to lose sight of its relation to other economic problems, it would be less difficult to maintain, in public thought, a truer balance and a clearer realization of the correlation that actually exists. No doubt it is this apparent tendency which has resulted, as many seem inclined to believe, in placing overemphasis upon the economic needs of the people in distinctly agricultural sections of the United States, that has caused the people of other sections to lose sight of the necessity of reaching a right solution of the farmers' problems if it is hoped to maintain the general level of national prosperity which is now being enjoyed. It is admitted, and always without argument. that agriculture is the chief basic industry of the country. And yet there is apparent a tendency in the industrial sections, so called, to regard it merely as a collateral rather than a correlated industry. In the May 1 issue of Forbes' Magazine, Arthur Capper, United States Senator from Kansas, recognized as the leader of the farm bloc in Congress, makes the statement that there is hardly an industry that does not depend directly or indirectly upon agriculture. There is need, in considering what he has to say further in discussing the farm problem, to get this viewpoint, which is neither unique nor original. It is laid down as a premise only because of what appears to be the tendency to lose sight of its economic significance. After enumerating several related industries, such as milling, meat packing, cotton spinning and weaving, leather manufacturing, and others directly dependent upon the products of the farms, Senator Capper finds that these are all somewhat too obviously related or correlated industries. He says the busy business man wants to know more, and first of all what is wrong with conditions on the farms; what relief should be applied; and just how his own business is to be benefited if the relief sought is given. It is the view of the Senator that the provisions which have been made and the methods applied in a desire to stabilize manufacturing industries, for instance, and for insuring the operation of adequate transportation facilities, to say nothing of the tacit consent accorded to labor organizations in their determined effort to fix high and ever-advancing wage scales, have not been made available in aiding and encouraging what he regards as the chief and most important of all industries.

The Kansas Senator's argument, specifically, is a defense of the relief plan proposed in the McNary-Haugen bill, which he declares would apply to the farming industry virtually the methods which have aided in stabilizing other related industries. At the moment, he finds, farming is not profitable. The economic prob-lem will be solved, he insists, when it can be carried on at a profit. It is interesting to observe, however, that he finds, just as have other students of the subject-some of whom have disagreed with him as to the form of relief to be provided—that the great problem is one of efficient and economic distribution. He tells us that "an army of passers-on takes nearly threequarters of the consumer's dollar, while farm dollars so obtained are only eighty cents by comparison with dollars made in all other basic industries."

Likewise he confirms the claim, regarding which there should be no slightest disagreement, that independent, individual competitive marketing of agricultural products is uneconomic. Most of the farmers' products seek a market within thirty or sixty days after their maturity, and it is thus easy, under present conditions, for speculative interests to take advantage of the situation. The need clearly is for government aid. How can this aid be best and most effectively extended? Senator Capper apparently does not find it possible or advisable to offer an alternative for the measure which has already met Executive disapproval. His arguments in support of that plan are along the lines followed by the proponents of that plan when it was before Congress. The President, in his veto message, pointed out what he declared were inherent weaknesses and serious constitutional defects in that measure. He sought to show that the methods advanced would not insure to agriculture in general the benefits claimed and sought. In the same message President Coolidge expressed the hope that the relief needed will be provided in legislation which will meet the approval of the farmers themselves. These methods, he points out, must be devoted to the building up of farmer-controlled marketing concerns equipped to handle occasional surplus production, with the benefits shared by agriculture as a whole.

Rheims Cathedral Restoration

IN THE announcement that the nave of Rheims Cathedral has been completely restored and that services have been resumed therein for the first time since the war is written another chapter in the healing of the wounds of 1914-18. It was in September, 1914, that the building was last in normal use and even then its bombardment had already begun. Moreover, until the end of the war the cathedral remained in the fire zone, constantly under fire, and at times, as in April, 1917, exposed to a merciless attack from guns of heavy caliber.

That the cathedral withstood the onslaugnts as well as it did spoke well for the thirteenth century masons who built it. And that, when stock was taken of the damage done, it was found that its state was what was described as desperate is not any disparagement of their work. Considering the magnitude of the ruin, that it has been found possible to restore part of it with a remarkable degree of completeness is a marvel of architectural and building genius and a tribute to the energy of the people responsible for it, while the fact that American finance has helped to make the restoration of this world-famous monument possible augurs well for international accord.

It is useless to go into detail regarding the that needed and that still needs to be done. One is told, however, that the patience and skill that has been brought to bear upon the problems presenting themselves in its connection have resulted in a success to date almost beyond expectation. And the rest, it is said, is largely a question of money. The problem of churches and historical monuments in France has had so far to give way to more practical necessities, but there is no chance of their being forgetten. The restoration as it proceeds may be seen as going hand in hand with the complete wiping out of the antagonism of the war time. That it will be carried through to its ultimate is but a natural expectation.

Cotton From the Flood Districts

IN TRADE circles the recent advance in the market price of raw cotton has been accepted as directly caused by the flood in the Mississippi Valley. When cotton reaches sixteen cents a pound there may be good reason for gratitude on the part of those who grew the staple last year and hoped to receive for it a compensation more nearly equal to the cost of production than was the case last fall and winter. And whereas it may be true that the reports from the flooded districts have had what is known as a "moral" effect in trade circles and have resulted in the upward movement in cotton prices, there are factors entirely foreign to that event which must have a far more serious effect upon the cotton trade. In so analyzing the situation, also, there is no inclination to cast doubt upon the value of cotton at the sixteencent price. Many factors will honestly enough contend that the staple is worth all of that.

According to the latest reports, and while these may not be entirely official they are accepted by the trade as sufficiently accurate for all practical purposes, the floods in the Mississippi Valley have overflowed some 2,500,000 acres. From these same acres it was estimated some 1.250,000 bales of cotton were obtained last year. In the aggregate, such an amount may appear to be a considerable quantity of cotton, but actually it was less than one-tenth of the total cotton crop of last season. It may be conceded that a depletion of some million and a quarter bales from a normal crop would cause a radical shortage in the market for raw cotton and greatly enhance the price, but there is today no assurance that this is going to be the case. As a matter of fact, the daily statistics of shipments show that the present higher price of cotton has brought to concentration points an increasing quantity of the staple. It is increasingly evident from the statistics available that the present price of cotton, if based upon the quantity of the staple available, is too high if the price last winter was an accurate estimate of the value resulting from a free operation of the so-called law of supply and demand. There is really no definite assurance that the cotton crop this year is going to be so greatly curtailed as some factors would have it thought. Probably it is true that in certain instances threefourths of the flooded area in the Mississippi Valley will be planted to crops other than cotton this year, but that is no assurance that the coming crop will be less than an average.

As a matter of fact, it has been brought forcibly home that cotton is a valuable staple in the United States and throughout the world. Textile mills are reputed to be making large profits from their operations on the fiber this year, and the merchants handling the goods are finding no great difficulty in disposing of the product. Such being the case, no inconsiderable proportion of this renewed prosperity should be passed on back to the plantation. The flood may have inspired that added incentive to the market necessary to enhance the price to its present level, but it has not caused that economic destruction which many accounts would make it appear to have been the case. Out of all such incidents comes good, and this is the reward to the cotton planter.

Flutes and Flute-Playing

PLOWING into a hollow stick is undoubtedly one of the oldest of pastimes; and boring the wood and punching the holes, one of the longest practiced of occupations. Playing on the perfected form of the hollow stick, the flute, is veritably one of the most difficult of the musical professions; while fashioning the tube. today usually of metal, and contriving the perforations and the keys to open and close them, is one of the most skilled of the musical crafts. Accounting for the sound of flutes already built is likewise one of the hardest questions in analysis, and controlling and regulating the sound of those in process of construction is one of the most elusive problems in synthesis that theorists and designers encounter.

Historically, the important truth to be borne in thought perhaps is, that the flute captured the scale for musical art and made feasible the invention of tunes. But whether that generalization holds or not, an understanding of the instrument from the earliest times to the present seems to be necessary for anybody who contemplates enlarging its power and enriching its color, or who meditates increasing its melodic fluency and extending somewhat its harmonic adaptability.

Dayton C. Miller, who has placed on public view in New York his collection of flutes, and who has made known the outcome of much physical research in his lecture on "Tone Qualty," shows precisely the same concern about what was formerly achieved as about what may hereafter be attained. He finds that looking back is equivalent to seeing ahead. From ancient flute of cane or bone, to modern flute of ebony or silver, he must possess all disclosed facts before he can expect to explore successfully hidden possibilities.

Compliantly, the flute has always fitted itself to the manners of the times and responded to the need of the moment. It has been loudvoiced in the open air and soft-spoken indoors. Nothing ever uttered a more martial scream than the fife, or a more polite sigh than the flute of conical outer taper, both rather obsolete now. The Greek aulos probably had a proper volume and accent for accompanying a choral interlude in drama, as the Boehm flute has for the obbligato of the mad-scene in the opera,

"Lucia." Physicists have been endeavoring of late to evolve sonorities that shall answer in point of strength and of beauty to the requirements of the twentieth-century orchestra. But Professor Miller may lecture on the subject and Theo-critus may epigrammatize: "Wish you to play the double aulos, while I strike the harp and Daphnis sings?"-the chief responsibility lies where it always lay. Whether a symphony listener gives attention, or whether Pan keeps awake, depends on the imaginativeness and the expressiveness of the performer.

Mandated Government in Palestine

By ALBERT F. GILMORE

just and efficient government in Palestine cannot be fully appreciated without due consideration of the extreme racial and religious differences of the inhabitants. While the population may be roughly divided into Arabic (Moslem), Jew and Christian, there are many minor subdivisions, both racial and religious, within the larger groups, each differing in some essential from all the others, a condition which greatly complicates the problem of government.

The Moslems of Palestine, of many races and varying in color from white to coal black, with all the ethnic differences which that implies, are for the most part Sunnis, that is, Traditionists. They are further divided into four groups, viz., Shafi, Hanbali, Hanafi, and Maliki-all Moslems and followers of the prophet, yet each group differing from every other in some more or less important particular in respect of worship.

What is true of the Moslem is also true to a certain extent of some of the other religious groups into which the cosmopolitan population of Palestine is divided. These groups include Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholic, the Uniate churches (which while acknowledging the authority of the Pope yet preserve in some degree liturgies and customs), the Armenian church, Jacobites. Copts, and Abyssinians, the Anglican group, the American colony, the German Templar community, Jews, Samaritans, Druses, Metawileh and Bahais, each group bent upon preserving its identity and its peculiar reli

While it would seem that their racial and religious differences offer difficulties almost insurmountable in the administration of a government inspired by outside authority, the difficulties are immeasurably increased when a benevolent power undertakes to establish self-govern-ment by so mixed a population. Then it is that the lack of political experience becomes manifest.

The desire of a community to govern itself is natural and commendable; self-determination is a term often heard in recent years. But to prepare a community so widely divergent in tradition, racial, industrial, and religious, as the present population of Palestine is a work requiring almost inexhaustible patience and the exercise of great wisdom. To illustrate: Soon after England established civil government in Palestine, a plebiscite was undertaken to elect a legicative council which should function with the High ioner in formulating ordinances to supplant the Turkish laws and to institute new laws where necessary. What happened? The largest racial group, the Arabs, refused to participate in the election, thus frustrating the

Now, four years later, the first general election in Jerusalem is being held amid great excitement among the various groups, arising from a zeal to elect their respective candidates. Although in certain cases this excitement has found expression in the discharge of firearms, no casualties have been reported.

It is evident that while the interim between the first attempts to hold an election and the present has brought some understanding of the rights, duties, and privileges of citizenship in a self-governing community, there is still much to be done in the way of political education to develop the true sense of service. Self-interest, the desire to use political privilege purely for, personal gain, is still uppermost among these primitive peoples.

In the proclamation which General Allenby caused to be read to the inhabitants of Jerusalem in English, French, Italian, Arabic, and Hebrew, on the occasion of his formal entry into the Hely City, two days after its capitulation in December, 1918, occurs this notable passage:

in December, 1918, occurs this notable passage:
Since your city is regarded with affection by the adherents of three great religions of mankind and its soil has been consecrated by the prayers and pilgrimages of multitudes of devout people of these three religions for many centuries, therefore do I make known to you that every sacred building, monument, holy spot, shrine, traditional site, endowment, pious bequest, or customary place of prayer, or whatsoever form of the three religions, will be maintained and protected according to the existing customs and beliefs of those to whose faiths they are sacred.

That the government established by British military authority scrupulously carried out the high purpose of this declaration, there is not the slightest doubt.

The Balfour resolution declared the purpose of the British Government to be to look with favor upon the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and to use as best endeavor to facilitate that object. It also stated, "If the growth of Jewish influence were accompanied by Arab degradation, or even by a neglect to promote Arab advancement, it would fail in one of its essential motives.'

With so definite and so noble a purpose as its goal, the English Government under the mandate of the League ment will in time win the respect of all classes.

THE difficulties attendant upon the establishment of a | of Nations set out to establish a righteous and efficient government over a territory some 8000 square miles in extent, having a population of more than 700,000, which had suffered for centuries from oppression and misrule.

That the government established under the mandate has succeeded in maintaining the status quo ante bellum regarding the holy places, and in protecting the rights of the various religious groups, is evidenced by the increasing amity and cordiality between them. It has also succeeded in introducing civic betterment in the form of improved public utilities and the establishment of free public schools.

For purposes of administration, Palestine is divided into three districts or provinces, viz., Northern, Middle, and Southern, the middle district including Jerusalem, which is the seat of government. The chief executive, the High Commissioner, is appointed by the Crown and is answerable to the British Government. The Chief Secretary is the Commissioner's principal adviser, and also the channel for all communications with other officials. He becomes the executive in the absence of the High Commissioner.

An executive council, consisting of the High Commissioner, the Chief Secretary, Attorney-General, and Treasurer, aids in an advisory capacity in the exercise of the administrative authority. There is also a council consisting of the heads of the various departments, which exercises a certain legislative function, its acts and ordinances being subject to veto by the British Secretary of State.

No ordinance may be passed "which shall restrict complete freedom of conscience and free exercise of all forms of worship when not subversive to the maintenance of public order and morals." Thus is religious liberty fully safeguarded.

The executive head of each province or district is a governor, or commissioner as he is more commonly termed, also appointed by the Crown. In the district including Jerusalem, the governor is in effect the depaty of the High Commissioner, who resides in the Govern-ment House, the pretentious German hospice founded by ex-Empress Auguste and placed under the protection of the Order of St. John.

Each of the four cities in the district has an elective council. That in Jerusalem numbers twelve, divided as follows: Moslem, five; Jew, four; Christian, three. The recent election occupied three days. The better to avoid disturbance, each group has its own polling place outside the walls in the new city.

Suffrage is exercised by male Palestinians twenty-five years of age who pay one pound municipal house tax, or half that sum as a government land tax. Only those who half that sum as a government land tax. Only those who pay double these amounts are eligible for election to—the council. Aliens acquire citizenship by a process of naturalization after two years' residence in the country. From the council of each city the High Commissioner appoints a mayor, who thus becomes the executive officer for his city. As the district of Jerusalem includes Ramallah, Jericho, and Bethlehem, the High Commissioner has the selection of four mayors in this district.

While the general government is responsible for education, general welfare, roads, police, and sanitation, there are many phases of public well-being which fall to the City Council. This body is especially helpful in promoting cleanliness and maintaining peace and good will between the many factions. Taxation still follows the Turkish custom. A tithe of one-tenth of his crops is collected from each farmer, beside which there is a small land tax. A revision of the methods of taxation is a problem for early consideration.

The judicial department is quite separate from the executive, and the chief judges receive appointment from the Crown. Local magistrates are appointed by the High Commissioner. Ecclesiastical courts of the various religious groups exercise exclusive jurisdiction over marriage and discre, questions of alimony and confirmation of wills. They also control all endowments for religious purposes, and their judgments are executed by process of the civil.

One of the great needs in Palestine is for the establishment of a more extensive public school system, in which the children of all races and creeds may participate. Thus would prejudice in some degree at least be overcome and the common interest be emphasized. So long as each religious group keeps its children apart from all the others, so long will there be lack of that sense of unity which is essential in a self-governed community.

As one travels about Palestine he sees many evidences of new courage and hopefulness. Homes are under construction far from neighbors, where formerly habitations vere grouped for protection. With the development of in dustries and the introduction of improved methods in agriculture, a period of prosperity will ensue the like of which has not been known before. Stable and just govern-

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Moscow

ASTER is probably the most popular and widely celebrated national holiday in Russia. Not only are the churches densely crowded during the long picturesque service which is held on the night before Easter. but the day itself is an occasion for festive visits among friends. Colored eggs are much in evidence and the favor ite Russian delicacies known as paska (a rich concoction in which cheese is the basic ingredient) and kulitch, a sort of raisin cake, are on every board. Moscow is usually plainly if not shabbily dressed, but everyone appears to find new clothes for the Easter holidays. One seems to see more white collars at this time than during all the other seasons of the year. While the chief religious service is held on the eve of Easter, the intermittent clanging of the city's numerous church bells continues to proclaim the holiday for several days.

Russia is regaining some long-lost citizens in the shape of the Nekrasovtsi, or followers of Nekrasov. These are Cossacks who left Russia in the eighteenth century because of political and religious differences with the Government and took up their abode in Turkey. They are now returning to Russia in large groups and are receiving community allotments of land in the Salsky steppes in the Don country of southeastern Russia. Notwithstanding their long period of exile they speak pure Russian of the time of Catherine II.

The Russian Reconstruction Farms, a pioneer enter-prise launched by a group of Americans in the north Caucasus region, now keeps the outside world in touch with its activities by sending out an occasional letter of information. Although it is inconveniently located, from the standpoint of the casual traveler, being situated on a branch railroad with rather bad connections with the main line, it is something of a magnet for the American social students who occasionally visit Russia. Its latest achieve-ments, it seems, are the building of a bath-house which is equally appreciated by the American personnel and the Russian peasants of a neighboring village, the linking up of the various buildings in the farm territory by telephonic connection and the establishment of radio connection with America. The radio enthusiasts in the farm colony were recently able to "listen in" on a whole program given by the Schenectady (N. Y.) radiocasting station.

The unemployed are a constant problem in Russia According to the latest available figures there are now 1,271,000 registered unemployed in the Soviet Union, an increase of 320,000 for the last year. The root cause of Russian unemployment, it is generally recognized, is agrarian rather than industrial. The industries, which are steadily increasing their production, employ more workers from year to year; but this is more than counterbalanced by the constant flow of peasants, who cannot make a decent living out of the soil, into the cities and towns. The Soviet leaders believe that unemployment will disappear only gradually as a griculture becomes more modernized and diversified and as the state finds the resources to subsidize the transportation and settlement of large numbers of peasants to the vast open spaces of Siberia and other unsettled or thinly settled portions of the Soviet Union. Recently there has been a regular stampede of unemployed into the Siberian town of Semipede of themployed into the Shah to pede of the Purkestan-siberia Railroad. Warnings have been issued that local labor will supply all the building needs of this railroad during the first year of its construction.

The Russian Academy of Natural Sciences is at work on the production of a new map of Russia, planned to show the various nationalities of the country and the density of population in various regions. The map will be quite up-to-date, as it is based on the latest census re-turns. The last map of this kind was produced in the sixties of the last century and was mostly confined to the European part of Russia.

The Communist who is sent abroad on a foreign mission does not always conform to the strict rules prescribed by party discipline. Free from the scrutiny of his comrades, he sometimes throws money about with a lavishness which ill becomes a member of a proletarian organization. The Control Committee that looks after the personal behavior of Communist Party members and is supposed to censure or punish them for any delinquencies, has recently issued a pronouncement on this subject of "commandirovkas" or foreign missions. After mentioning some of the pet of-fenses of comrades who go abroad, such as stopping at the most expressive hetals vicities with the them that the most expensive hotels, visiting cities where the business requirement and charging articles of personal consumption to their expense accounts, it declares that the "régime of economy" is meant to apply to Communista abroad as well as at home, and says that it intends to hold responsible persons who are guilty of these offenses in the

A good many rare and valuable historical objects were apparently mislaid during the turmoil of revolution and are only gradually coming to light. One of the recent finds in this connection was a number of printed decrees dating from the time of the French Revolution, which were dis-covered in the estate of the landlord Sologub, in the Serpukhov region, south of Moscow. Another was a series of letters from Goethe to von Humboldt, written between letters from Goethe to von Humboldt, written between 1825 and 1830. These letters had somehow found their way into the geological archives.
